

D.C. FIRE FIGHTERS WILL BE GIVEN GAS AND SMOKE MASKS

New Experiments Being Conducted to Determine Best Means of Protection.

Special gas masks for fire-fighting, which will protect against all forms of smoke and chemical fumes will soon be supplied the District Fire Department, according to a statement made today by Fire Chief George Watson.

A "smoke house" has been equipped at the Bureau of Standards, where Government experts are experimenting with different types of masks, and the Washington Fire Department will be supplied with the type best fitted for fire-fighting purposes. According to Government experts.

Bewhiskered Blue Law Rises Up to Smite Sunday Baseball

HAGERSTOWN, Md., May 28.—High spirits induced by bottled spirits is about to break up Sunday baseball in incorporated towns of this county, it seems certain.

The reformers' spotlight was turned on the games when considerable disorder occurred. Liquor was blamed. State's Attorney D. A. Wolfinger and Sheriff Duffey have lent an ear to the reformers' appeal to resurrect an ancient blue law, it is stated, and have given orders for the arrest of any who play baseball on Sunday.

The army gas mask gives excellent protection against smoke and the irritating and distasteful products of combustion, but offer no protection against carbon-monoxide atmospheres deficient in oxygen or atmospheres containing ammonia gas. Firemen in various cities have been overcome while wearing army gas masks in fighting fires. It is also stated that gas masks of the army type can not be used in mines after fires and explosions.

WERE O.K. FOR BATTLEFIELD. This statement, they declare, was true so far as industrial gases are concerned, including products of combustion. A number of concerns, it is stated, have circularized city fire departments and mine operators, offering for sale the army type of gas mask, with unreserved statements that the masks would protect wearers in mines and burning buildings.

The falsity of these statements was evident to the Bureau of Standards, which took steps immediately to notify the public that army gas masks had serious limitations, especially when used in fire-fighting or in any place where unusually heavy amounts of poisonous gases were present.

According to Fire Chief Watson, as soon as the experiments are completed at the Bureau of Standards, Washington's fire-fighters will be supplied with a type of gas mask that will absorb carbon-monoxide and will protect against smoke, ammonia and practically all chemical fumes.

Statue of Hamilton, Donated by Woman, To Adorn Treasury

Work on Base to Be Expedited Preparatory to Unveiling in Fall.

As soon as current work is disposed of the office of the supervising architect will take up planning for the base of a monument of Alexander Hamilton which is to be erected at the entrance to the Treasury Department. The order of Congress to rush work on the proposed hospitals for the disabled soldiers, which call for an appropriation of millions of dollars, has overcrowded the architect's bureau, but when this undertaking is over the work on the base will begin.

Like the recently unveiled Dupont fountain, in Dupont circle, the Hamilton statue is the result of a private offering and in some ways it is a "monument of mystery," as the donor, who is an American woman, made the offer, which was accepted, to Secretary McAdoo upon the specific understanding that her name would remain a secret.

WORK OF FRASER. The Hamilton monument, which will be the next great piece of statuary unveiled in Washington, is the work of James Earl Fraser, who has done the work in his studio in Macdougall alley, in the Greenwich Village section of New York. Mr. Fraser, who is a native of Minnesota, was a student at the Ecole de Beaux Arts and the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. This is not his first work for the Treasury, for he designed the last five-cent piece, and his most famous work includes a bust of Theodore Roosevelt, a monument to Bishop Potter in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, a statue of John Hay in Cleveland and an equestrian relief portrait of the children of Harry Payne Whitney.

The statue of Hamilton, which will be placed on the broad expanse south of the Treasury facing the Sherman statue at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street, shows the statesman in arrested motion with his hat in his hand and his cloak thrown over his arm.

SCULPTOR'S DESCRIPTION. Mr. Fraser, who has been at work on the monument for more than a year describes it briefly as follows:

"I like to think that Hamilton has just come out on the steps of the old Treasury and is on his way to a Cabinet meeting. He has one of his usual struggles ahead of him in which he has his hand on his forehead. To measure and ideas from which we are deriving benefit today. He knows a fight is ahead of him, knows its strain, but knows also that he will win by the sheer power of his superiority of mind."

There is also an interesting story of the copartnership between the sculptor and the model:

There is a splendid man who swims who poses for the Frasers, and from his supple body the artist worked out that intangible motion of Hamilton's body at the shoulders and waist that gives such extraordinary grace to the figure. But when the statue was nearly done there came a hitch. The model sweated patiently away day by day (it was summer) in the hot old coat that had been resurrected for the purpose from some collection. But still the Hamilton did not progress as it should. Something beyond the model's power to suggest was needed.

A MYSTERIOUS MODEL. Then one day all was well. There was a new model who showed a curiously amused flicker of a smile when people came in and stared at him. And they stared because, in his black satin knee-breeches, he seemed simply a young aristocrat of a former day in the habiliments suited to him. And his casual way of running to the door when the bell rang, and being apparently unconscious of the sensation he caused in the hearts of visitors, only added to the impression that he was not simply a model "dressed up."

One young woman, of both the artistic and social worlds, scented a story instantly. She talked to the model about his manner to which she belonged, and he talked back in the terms of a familiar. She tried French, and got the same results—sparkle for sparkle, quip for quip. Mr. Fraser stood by apparently unconscious, as he worked on, but enjoying every bit of it with his own good sense of humor. But he never peeped, and only a chance mention of a name revealed the identity of the model—a young man born to the beau monde, whose rich and important father did not know that his son was thus obtaining a vicarious immortality.

"Now in ancient Greece," explained Mr. Fraser, "there would have been no mystery about it all. Members of the aristocracy there could be commanded by artists, and they felt honored, for was it not a god for whose human likeness they were posing."

While no date has been set for the unveiling of the statue, it is expected that the event, with much ceremony, will take place in the presence of President Harding and other distinguished guests late next fall or early next winter.

BOOST RICE AS FOOD BY ADVERTISING DRIVE

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—The newspaper advertising campaign conducted by the Associated Rice Millers of America has increased the consumption of rice in the United States from 2.47 pounds per capita to 7 pounds. This remarkable result is announced in the first annual report of Frank A. Godchaux, president of the organization.

"The first step taken by this company was the advertising of rice, with recipes," says Mr. Godchaux in his report. "This newspaper advertising campaign covered a period extending from November, 1920, through December, 1920. Through this medium we were able to reach 40 per cent of the total population of the United States. In connection with our advertising, the newspapers carried considerable editorial comment and other articles through which the industry as a whole has benefited to a great extent."

"As a result the consumption of rice commencing with the period of August 1, 1920, and ending on the last day of January, 1921, exceeded the domestic consumption from August, 1919, to August, 1920. The consumption since March 1, 1921, has increased materially over the consumption previous to that date during this year."

MUELLER LASHED SICK PRISONERS, BRITISH TESTIFY

"Atrocities," Judge Calls Acts of German Captain, at War Criminal Trials.

(International News Service). LEIPZIG, May 28.—Twenty witnesses from England, all former soldiers, testified today against Capt. Emil Mueller, the second German officer arraigned in the war criminal trials.

Captain Mueller was in charge of a German prison camp. He is accused of beating British prisoners with a riding whip and tying sick men to a stake for three days at a time. The conviction of Mueller seemed certain.

"Before us there is now being unrolled a terrible picture of war and I am deeply moved by it," said the judge. Then turning to Mueller, he exclaimed:

"How could you defend yourself against these extraordinarily serious charges? It is incomprehensible to me."

"These are atrocities," exclaimed the president of the court as he read some of the charges against Mueller. Some German papers express the hope that France and England will follow the example of Germany in punishing prison commanders who mistreated war prisoners. Newspapers declare there are on record large numbers of former German prisoners who allege that they were mistreated.

FINE FRUIT DEALERS FOR SALE OF DRINKS

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., May 28.—After going through one trial here in federal court at which the jury disagreed, U. and M. Ferrari, local fruit merchants, entered a plea of guilty at the Wheeling term this week to the charge of selling intoxicating liquor for purposes other than medicinal, and were fined $100 and costs each, the costs including payment for both the first and second trials.

It developed at the second hearing that the analysis made by Government agents of the contents of one of the bottles of "Old Reserve," one of the drinks which the Ferraris sold in bottles showed the alcoholic content far exceeding that displayed on the
